Nicole Miller wowed New York! On September 6th at Industria Studios, the Nicole Miller Spring 2019 collection had its runway debut during NYFW. The designer caught the attention of Elle, WWD, Vogue, the Cut, USA Today and many more publications. "I have noticed people have been copying a lot of my old dresses, so it just seemed like a trend – this longer, drape-y, kin of '40's style dress that I used to make in the 80's." - Nicole Miller on her Spring 2019 collection inspiration.

"Everything old is new again, but it wasn't just a trip down memory lane. Adding in several new elements, including twill coats covered in randomly generated words, color-blocked minis, and shredded denim toppers with a sequin sparkle," - Vogue about the nostalgic feel to Miller's collection.

"The Eighties don't seem to be going anywhere anytime soon. 'I had this club kid's idea because everybody seems to miss the clubs and the eighties scene,' Nicole Miller said backstage, hard at work sewing last-minute alterations to a sequin camouflage mini dress. 'The eighties seem to be quite on everybody's radar and everybody's sick of ruffles, of course, so I started there, and it went down a path and evolved.'" – WWD's interview with Nicole about her collection.
